Rawson Projects is very excited to announce a series of mini-exhibitions inviting each artist to transform the gallery space in order to present and explore the inspiration behind their most recent work.

Asking simply “what is inspiring you now?”, Rawson Projects gives five artists a carte blanche gallery space in which to reply. Encouraging experimentation in medium specificity and audience engagement, this two and a half month program opens up a conversation around creative influence, focusing on idea process in relation to each artist’s creative practice.

From curating an exhibition of a fellow artist’s work to turning the gallery into a pop-up shop to constructing a physical environment of memory and ritual, each artist reveals their unique perspective on what drives them to create.
